

State of Arkansas weather station network to provide data to many.

Press Release

March 16, 2009 -- The State of Arkansas is building a network of meteorological stations for governmental agencies, agricultural businesses and members of the public to monitor up-to-date weather conditions in their surrounding communities. The state has installed its first round on weather stations and expects to install more stations in the months to come. Information derived from these stations will be made readily available on the internet.
